Federal rental assistance helps struggling seniors, people with disabilities, veterans, and working families keep a roof over their heads, often by helping them afford rental units they find in the private market. Ten million people in over 5 million low-income households receive federal rental assistance.

10.2 million people in 5.2 million American households use federal rental assistance to afford modest housing. 69% are seniors, children, or people with disabilities.

Rental assistance helps 2 million of the United States’ seniors age in place.

Rental assistance helps 2.5 million people with disabilities to live independently in the United States.

Rental assistance helps 6 million people in families with children in the United States avoid homelessness.

Rental assistance supports working families: 55% of non-disabled, working-age American households receiving Department of Housing and Urban Development rental assistance include at least one worker.

Rental Assistance Supports All Types of American Communities

Number of Households Receiving Major Types of Federal Rental Assistance in the United States

- Housing Choice Vouchers: 2,276,400
- Public Housing: 896,700
- Section 8 project-based: 1,210,600
- Supportive elderly + disabled: 154,500
- USDA Rural Rental Assistance: 268,900

Federal rental assistance programs provided states with $48.5 billion in 2020.

...but 4 in 10 low-income* people in the United States are homeless or pay over half their income for rent. Most don’t receive federal rental assistance due to limited funding.
Rental Costs Have Risen in the United States

The median rent (including utilities) for an apartment in the United States was $1,100/month in 2019, a 15 percent increase since 2001.

But wages for many jobs have not caught up. As a result, 23.4 million people in 10.9 million low-income American households pay more than half their income for rent, often forgoing necessities, like food or medicine, to keep a roof over their heads. The federal government considers housing unaffordable if it costs more than 30 percent of a household's income.

Federal Rental Assistance Hasn't Kept Pace

Despite the importance of rental assistance, more federal dollars go to homeownership subsidies like the mortgage interest deduction, which mainly benefit higher-income households, instead of families that struggle the most to afford housing. American communities only thrive when everyone — renters and homeowners, whether Black, brown, or white — have access to decent, affordable housing.

23.4 million low-income American renters pay more than half their income for housing. Most don't receive rental assistance due to funding limitations. Who are they?

- 32% are children
- 34% are working adults
- 12% are seniors
- 18% have a disability
- 3% are veterans

When low-income renters can’t find a decent, affordable apartment, they are more likely to be evicted and risk becoming homeless.

On a single night in 2020, half a million people experienced homelessness in the United States. An estimated 1.4 million American school children lived in shelters, on the street, doubled up with other families, or in hotels or motels during the 2018-2019 school year.

Our country’s current policy approach gives more help to those who need it least. We can change this. Policymakers need to work together to expand rental assistance and ensure that all Americans have access to good, affordable homes.

Last updated January 18th, 2022

*Low-income = household income not exceeding 80 percent of local median income. For a family of three in the United States, 80 percent of the local median is equivalent to $57,550. Download data for all 50 states and D.C. here. Full sources and methodology available here.